Ratifies contracts with State Patrol troopers and inspectors, building trades union, and applies changes to payday loan regulations.

MADISON — Gov. Tony Evers today took action on three bills, including two bills providing wage increases for certain public employees such as State Patrol troopers and inspectors and employees in the building trades crafts collective bargaining unit.

Not among the state employee wage increases that the governor signed into law today is already-approved pay raises for about 35,000 University of Wisconsin System employees. The governor is currently suing legislative Republicans for unconstitutionally obstructing the University of Wisconsin System employees wage increases that were already approved by the Legislature and the governor through the biennial budget process.

“I am glad to be signing these two bills into law providing much-needed and well-deserved wage adjustments for our State Patrol and other folks in state service,” said Gov. Evers. “State employees are dedicated public servants who work diligently each and every day to serve our neighbors, our communities, and our state. I will always advocate for these folks to receive the wages they deserve and earn for their good work, which is why I would be remiss if I did not acknowledge that already-approved wage increases for about 35,000 UW System faculty and staff continue to be unconstitutionally obstructed by Republicans for no real reason whatsoever.”
