More questions arise about Wisconsin Senator's role in Trump's wrongdoings in Ukraine scandal.

MADISON - Sen. Ron Johnson, who's no stranger to humiliating himself on national television to defend President Trump, complained on Meet the Press yesterday that the whistleblower who drew attention to Trump's alleged bribery of the Ukrainian government "exposed things that didn't need to be exposed."

Excerpt from interview : "The weakening of executive privilege is not good, and by the way, those individuals that leaked this, you know, if their interest was a stronger relationship with Ukraine, they didn't accomplish this. Having this all come out into public, has weakened that relationship, has exposed things that didn't need to be exposed... This would have been far better off had we taken care of it behind the scenes."
