

Creation of State Board of Education Unneeded

Written by Tony Evers for State Superintendent, Amanda Brink

Friday, 13 January 2017 10:44 - Last Updated Friday, 13 January 2017 10:53

The current systems provides plenty of channels for new ideas and feedback from local communities. We don't need one more.

MADISON - As State Superintendent, Tony Evers convenes and participates in dozens of advisory councils across our state. Consisting of over 600 Wisconsinites, they regularly provide new ideas and feedback from local communities and the schools they represent.

These councils, combined with Tony's school visits, help shape the policies implemented at DPI. Ensuring kids are front and center of our public education system is Tony's priority.

We do not need more bureaucracy or more centralized control. The state legislature passes education laws, while the State Superintendent is directly accountable to the citizens. Our Founders debated this at length when writing our Constitution, and they wisely created an independent State Superintendent for a reason.