Wisconsin's political landscape was rocked Monday morning by the bombshell revelation that Supreme Court Justice Rebecca Bradley wrote articles as a columnist for the Marquette Tribune mocking the LGBT community and those suffering from AIDS, describing them as "queers", "degenerates" and "murderers".

MADISON - On Monday, March 7, highly offensive comments made by Rebecca Bradley when she was a student at Marquette University were released in a press conference at the State Capitol. The comments made by Bradley, who was appointed to the Wisconsin Supreme Court by Governor Scott Walker in 2015, included derogatory remarks directed at homosexuals and people with AIDS.

Rep. Dana Wachs (D-Eau Claire), the ranking Democrat on the Assembly Committee on Judiciary, said "Like so many Wisconsinites, I am frankly disgusted at the comments made by Justice Bradley".

"These views have no place in society and no place in our judicial system," said Wachs. "I question whether or not she can remain impartial in her position on the state's highest court. It is also of great concern that Governor Walker would appoint someone with such strong narrow-minded views to the Supreme Court."

"Our Supreme Court has a responsibility to treat everyone fairly and impartially in the eyes of the law," continues Wachs. "It is difficult to believe that someone who felt so strongly about certain people that she would openly write about it would be able to give those people a fair ruling in her current position."
