MADISON - It's been a busy start to the new year for us.

Last Wednesday, right after the holiday, we posted something on the NRA's spending on Scott Walker in the last election, and the media jumped all over it. If you didn't see the coverage, here's the original item:

Then earlier this week, we posted an article on the controversial powerline in the Driftless Area that American Transmission Co. and Dairyland Power are behind, and we noted that they'd been shoveling money on both sides of the fence:

ATC throws money around in Madison

And on Wednesday, I testified at the State Capitol against "Marsy's Law," an effort to amend our state constitution to protect victims' rights, which sounds like a good idea. But the resolution contains a huge defect, as I pointed out here:

I hope you like these postings.
