Eviction moratoriums end, and people still have no jobs and no money.

WASHINGTON, DC - Tenants are afraid mass evictions will take place in the coming weeks as eviction moratoria across the country begin to expire.

As the pandemic began to take a grip on the country in March, dozens of states passed eviction moratoriums that protect tenants from being removed from their homes. But landlords in most states are still able to file eviction notices, meaning some tenants only have until the day their state's eviction orders expire until they have to leave their homes.
